1 Large stocks are represented by the Ibbotson® Large Company Stock Index. Downturns in this example are defined by a time period when the stock market declined by 10% or more from its peak, while the recovery period indicates the number of months from the trough of the downturn to the market's previous peak. An investment cannot be made directly in an index. The data assumes reinvestment of all income and does not account for taxes or transaction costs.
