

The Roof Guys

Eliminating a Job for an Overworked Office Manager

There's always that question, "Did I do it right?"

Roofers are called storm chasers, because they literally do chase storms all over the country. But we stick to our local area here. There's plenty of work here to do, because even when the storm chasers come and go, they leave a lot of people who haven't been taken care of.

I was doing my own payroll at first, and then I began using one of our accountants to do the reports for me, because those payroll tax reports are a pain in the butt. They're time-consuming, and there's always that question, "Did I do it right? Did I put in the right information?"

We're a small company, and I do all the clerical work. I don't have a lot of time to worry about payroll. So last year, when an ADP representative came in, I decided that maybe it's time for a change.

My time is worth way more than the money

The payroll now literally takes me less than five minutes to do. And I know everything is taken care of so I don't have to worry about the IRS or the government. They take care of all that stuff for me.

It's just so simple. Everything is at my fingertips, because it's all online. And if I have questions about how to do something on their website, they're very helpful. Any time I've ever called, I've gotten more than enough help.

It ended up costing roughly the same price as I was paying an accountant to help me with just the reports. And money isn't the issue anyway. The issue is there's only 24 hours in a day, and I need time. My time is worth way more than the money I'm spending on payroll.

As the office manager for The Roof Guys, a small roof-repair business in Minnesota, Joe Tessling doesn't have time to waste on payroll and tax forms — particularly when things get busy. After eight years of handling these duties on his own, Joe decided to let ADP® lend him a hand.

Company Vitals

Name: The Roof Guys

Industry: Roofing

Established: 2009

Owner: Jamey Williams

Employees: 3

Locations: 1

Headquarters: Apple Valley, Minnesota

Business Challenge: The office manager was spending too much time and effort on payroll and tax forms.

How ADP Helped: RUN Powered by ADP® drastically reduced the time he spent on payroll and helped ensure all tax forms were filled out correctly.